Whaler Margaret Near Home Port.

In New London Harbor After Nine Months' Trip—Has 350 Barrels of Oil On Board—Expected To Dock Here This Morning.

Back from a cruise which began last October, the whaler Margaret arrived in New London harbor and cast anchor Saturday afternoon about 4 o'clock. The hour was too late to find the customs officers, so that the whaler could not proceed up the river to Norwich where her owners are awaiting her when she arrives this morning.

After considerable delay the customs officers were found and the ship given her papers, having also been examined by the health officers and given a clean bill of health. It was too late to come up the river that night, so that Captain Gibbons left his boat in charge of the second mate and came to this city by trolley.

On his arrival here he reported that the whaler had on board 350 barrels of oil, which was considered about an average catch for the trip and would insure a profitable voyage. The ship's company all came home in good health, and the voyage had been without bad fortune or serious accidents to any of the crew.

The whaler left here on October 11th bound for the whaling grounds on the west coast of Africa, but this time had to be abandoned when the boat sprung a leak and had to be beached at the Barbadoes for nine weeks while she was made tight. This was the only unfortunate incident of the voyage.

The boat will be unloaded here, as she has been upon her return from former whaling voyages, and the oil will be shipped to New Bedford to be sold.
